'Impeachment too late'

Nograles: Chances slim, none

By Michael Lim Ubac

THE SENATE'S BOMBSHELL recommendation that President Macapagal-Arroyo be impeached is a case of "too little, too late," senators said yesterday.

In fact, Sen. Joker Arroyo pointed out, the Senate could not compel Ombudsman Merceditas Gutierrez to initiate an impeachment proceeding against the President and even prosecute her husband and 10 others with whom she purportedly conspired to defraud the government and get kickbacks from the scrapped National Broadband Network (NBN) contract with ZTE Corp. of China.

"Sadly, the eerie fate of this inquiry is that after the committee report is adopted by the Senate in plenary, it will again be just another episode that would find its way to the racks of the blue ribbon committee archives alongside a plethora of committee reports on the misdeeds in the past of other wrongdoers who were never prosecuted by the executive or the Ombudsman," Arroyo said in his "concurring and dissenting opinion," which forms

LAS VEGAS—THE LULL IN BETWEEN the official welcome laid out by the MGM Grand for the two boxers facing off on Nov. 14 spoke volumes about how this was going to be more Manny Pacquiao's show than it would be Miguel Cotto's.

But it's not like Cotto has no plans of raising the story line.

Pacquiao walked the red carpet of the MGM Grand lobby to deafening cheers and exploding flashbulbs, and made his way up a makeshift ring adorned with a centerpiece golden lion statue to a reception fit for a king, a reception that surprised even the boxer-celebrity who is accustomed to crowds mobbing his every public move.

"I am surprised and happy that a lot of people came," Pacquiao told reporters from both print and broadcast media, who tried to squirm their way in front of him to capture a sound bite or two even as photographers and cameramen jostled for prime shots at the MALACAÑANG IS NOT SWEATING blood over the Senate recommendation that an impeachment complaint be filed against President Macapagal-Arroyo in connection with the scandal-ridden National Broadband Network (NBN) deal with China's ZTE Corp.

And the Senate report may not convince Ombudsman Merceditas Gutierrez to revise her resolution clearing the First Couple of any liability in the NBN-ZTE scandal.

Lorelei Fajardo, deputy presidential spokesperson, yesterday expressed confidence that Ms Arroyo would weather another impeachment case that might be filed by her political enemies.

"IS THE TRUTH NOT IMPORTANT TO Filipinos?" said whistle-blower Rodolfo Lozada Jr. who, along with businessman Jose de Venecia III, exposed in the Senate hearings allegations of bribery and overpricing in the project to wire digitally the nation's bureaucracy.

"Upon closer review of the report, it can be noted that Gordon's statement that the President and the First Gentleman should explain why they played golf with ZTE officials was just a slap on the wrist," said the government consultant on the project.

Why are President Macapagal-Arroyo and First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo getting only a "slap on the wrist?" whistle-blower Lozada asked.

"The whole country saw how the people of GMA and FG worked to hide the truth that they were the masterminds behind the NBN-ZTE crime," Lozada said.

Typhoon rehab, not VFA, tops Clinton's RP agenda

By Jerry E. Esplanada

TYPHOON RELIEF IS ON THE agenda; the Visiting Forces Agreement (VFA) is not.

Typhoon rehabilitation is on top of the agenda of US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton in her scheduled talks today with President Macapagal-Arroyo and other top government officials, according to US Ambassador to the Philippines Kristie Kenney.

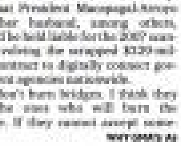

Clinton's "first and foremost point in coming here is to show solidarity with the Filipino people in the wake of the devastation of the typhoons," Kenney told reporters after yesterday's Veterans' Day rites at the Manila American Cemetery and Memorial at Fort Bonifacio.

"So I'm sure that typhoon relief and how we can continue to work together to get people back on their feet ... It's on top of her agenda," the ambassador said.

There is one thing they would not talk about—the Visiting Forces Agreement between Manila and Washington.

Angono's waterworld

By LJ Pasion
Angono, Rizal

SENANDO APILAN SITS ON A makeshift bamboo walkway, raised inches above the murky water, picking bones out of a plastic container full of ground fish meat, which he plans to turn into fried bola-bola (fish balls).

Just a few feet away on the same bridge, someone's laundry is left on a tub full of suds.

"That's the way it is here," Apilan said in Filipino. "We use every available space to do our chores."

The covered court of Barangay Poblacion Ibaba in Angono, Rizal, located close to the shores of the Laguna de Bay is still knee-deep in water as of Monday.

It shelters nearly 100 families, whose homes have remained submerged as the lake swelled from rain brought about by recent typhoons that hit Metro Manila and nearby provinces.

"Before, we were staying at the Angono Elementary School," said Apilan. "But we were made to leave once classes started again."

Apilan, 39, earns a small sum from working as an extra in construction jobs, but job opportunities are scarce nowadays. His wife earns P200 a week from doing laundry.

A few meters from where he is sitting, his wife is busy sewingdrapes in their "house," old wood and bamboo put up to form a cubicle, raised inches above the water. Measuring about five square meters, it is barely enough to accommodate the couple and their two children.

'This place should not have been declared an evacuation center,' said Dr. Emmanuel Luna, a community development professor at the University of the Philippines

DISPLACED by Tropical Storm "Ondoy," families continue to deal with knee-deep water at the covered court of Barangay Poblacion Ibaba in Angono, Rizal. The area was overwhelmed by flood when Typhoon "Santi" raised the water level of Laguna de Bay.

Only 3 aisles

The court is filled with similar structures, leaving only three aisles to move through. A lack of bridges in the interior means evacuees have no choice but to wade in dark brown water if they should go outside.

Plastic wrappers, fruit peelings, wood chips and saliva float on the water.

"After I wash clothes, I just throw the water into the flood," said Lita Figueroa, the owner of the tub sitting on the bamboo bridge.

"Sometimes, we also urinate here, since the water is already dirty," said Apilan.

Outside the court, near the gate, are four restrooms set up by the international aid group Oxfam two weeks ago. They now reek as two large drums are already full of waste products that have yet to be siphoned.

From a hose attached to a public faucet evacuees get clean water for cooking and drinking. This is also where some of them bathe, their feet submerged in the flood.

Raquel de Borja says she goes to her house a few blocks away when she needs to use the toilet or take a bath.

"There's still running water there, but we can't stay there because the floors are still under water," she said in Filipino. She uses a raft made of banana tree trunks to travel to her house without getting wet.

She sits on the edge of their makeshift shelter, chatting with a neighbor, while her husband sleeps inside.

"Right now, all we can do is wait for the flood to subside," said De Borja, who will be celebrating her 50th birthday today.

Evacuation center?

"This place should not have been declared an evacuation center," said Dr. Emmanuel Luna, a community development professor at the University of the Philippines (UP).

On Friday, faculty members of the University of the Philippines' College of Social Welfare and Community Development visited the area, along with Oxfam staff members, to provide relief goods to the evacuees.

"It's the responsibility of the local government unit to find a proper relocation site for the victims," Luna added.

Barangay chair Romeo Reyes said he was trying to talk with the owner of a vacant lot in Teysman, Binangonan for its use as a relocation site for the evacuees.

"We are just a small barangay with little income," he said.

Reyes said he spoke recently with Oxfam about the construction of six more toilets for the evacuees. He said he also called Manila Water regarding the siphoning of sewage from the existing toilets in the covered court.

Barangay request

He said he had requested the municipal government for wood to build more walkways for the evacuees inside the covered court.

"I made that request right after Typhoon 'Ondoy,'" Reyes said. According to him, Angono Mayor Aurora Villamayor told him that he will be handed the wood once the municipal office has gathered enough.

"The question is, when will they give it?" asked Reyes.

Villamayor's public information officer, Richard Gappi, said that maybe the barangay leader was not following up his request as often as he should.

"Besides, they can purchase the materials themselves and reimburse the expenses with the mayor's office," he said. "If we do not give them the materials, are they just going to wait and not do anything?"

Regarding the state of the evacuation center in Poblacion Ibaba, Gappi said the municipality was "concerned by the situation."

"There is another evacuation at Angono National High School, which is also under water and also houses around 100 families," he said. "Even if we had a place to transfer them, it will be overcrowded, which in evacuation center standards, is also unacceptable."

Around Angono are 17 evacuation centers, Gappi said. The provincial government was considering a parcel of land in Montalban that could be developed into a relocation site, he added.

At the Angono Elementary School, 83 families are housed inside 13 classrooms at the back of the campus. A majority of them are from Barangay San Vicente and Kalayaan, where floods are still more than a meter deep.

Ricardo Cielo, who is from San Vicente, said the water was still above knee level inside his house when he visited last week.

But while he still has a place to go home to when the floods recede, some people are not so lucky.

Burglary

Marylou Vila of Barangay Kalayaan found her house stripped of construction materials and other belongings when she visited it on Friday morning.

Her washing machine, galvanized iron sheets from their roof, and electrical wiring were only some of the things taken from her home.

"We're already victims of the flood and now we've been robbed," Vila said in Filipino. "Those thieves have no shame."

This time, Laguna evacuees cheer for 'Santi'

By Clarice Colting-Pohancharl
Los Baños, Laguna

WHEN "SANTI" ARRIVED ON THE night of Nov. 1, evacuees at the Calo Elementary School in Bay town in Laguna cheered.

No, they were not celebrating the return of the typhoon that struck the province and brought devastation on Oct. 31.

Santi came into their world as a healthy baby boy born along a small corridor of the school.

"Relatives and other evacuees already started calling him Santi when he was born. That is why we decided to give him that name," said his 37-year-old mother, Rowena Amoroto.

When she went to a public clinic in a nearby barangay on Sunday afternoon, Amoroto was told by the midwives that her cervical opening was still only two centimeters. They advised her to go home and walk around awhile.

"I walked around until nighttime. At past 9 p.m., my womb started to hurt a lot and I could no longer bear the pain for me to go back to the clinic," Amoroto said.

So she lay down on her mat on the floor. But as soon as she removed her undergarments, her water bag broke, followed by the baby. It was 9:25 p.m.

Her husband, Alfredo, managed to hold and clean the baby until a midwife arrived a few minutes later.

"I was very nervous because I did not know what to do. But I was very happy that I was able to bring my child into this world," Alfredo said. Santi is the couple's fifth child.

The mood at the evacuation center turned festive, Rowena said. Some even gave food, like biscuits.

Until Monday afternoon, evacuees milled at the corridor entrance draped with a cloth to give some semblance of a room.

MOTHER Rowena Amoroto is gave birth to Baby Santi in a corridor of the Calo Elementary School in Bay, Laguna, where they evacuated since Tropical Storm "Ondoy" struck the town.

Flooded home

Rowena's extended family has been in the evacuation center since Oct. 2 after Tropical Storm "Ondoy" flooded their home near a vegetable farm in the lakeshore Barangay San Antonio.

Water reaches waist-deep whenever the Laguna Lake becomes swollen. When Storm Santi hit town, the lake water again rose.

"We have nowhere else to go. We cannot go back yet because aside from the deep water, there is also a foul smell whenever the weather is sunny," Rowena said.

Alfredo catches fish in the lake whenever he can so they can have some income. Sometimes, he earns as much as P300 a day.

"Maybe the baby heard you saying that you had no money, that is why he came out here in the evacuation center," Rowena said.

A staff member of the Municipal Social Welfare and Development Office (MSWD) provided Rowena's family medicines, a baby blanket and some diapers.

Asked if the baby's health will not be affected if they stayed along the corridor, Rowena said she was worried because the place was hot and stuffy, and a canal nearby was smelly. Among the common illness affecting evacuees here is coughs and colds.

"We have no choice. The only other place we could go—in Binangonan—is very far," Rowena said.

'Igado,' as Ilocanos would have it

The pork-and-liver dish in thick brown sauce is healthily garnished with vegetables in this version

THERE ARE DIFFERENT ways of cooking Ilocano's quintessential igado, a pork-and-liver dish with thick brown sauce that's perfectly seasoned and simply delicious.

Depending on what part of northern Luzon you come from (Ilocos provinces, Cagayan or Abra), igado is prepared in endless ways—with lots of liver sauce; salty, bitter and sweet; dry and meaty (including pork lungs, heart and kidney); or drenched in lots of oil or tomato paste.

Chef Jerome Ragsac' version of igado is a bit on the salty side yet filled with a variety of vegetables—winged beans (sigarilyas), squash flowers, cabbages and string beans.
